UP ABOVE THE CLOUDS

MR. HARVEY TELLS ABOUT A MOUNTAIN CLIMB.

Fourth installment of His Interesting Articles on the Wonders of the Pacific Coast.

One beautiful sun shining morning in company with a small party we left Los Angeles by trolley for the ostrich farm where we could see hundreds of ostriches of all sizes from those just hatched to old and very large ones. A person can buy very large and fine feathers very cheap. It is really a fine view to see hundreds of those long limbed animals running in herds about as fast as a horse could run.

From there we went to Pasadena, a very beautiful little city and said to be the paradise of the millionaires of California. The hotel Green is located there. We were shown through it and informed that two thousand guests would not cause them any inconvenience for lack of entertainment in any way. The rates range from 7 to 35 dollars per day. Of course we did not stay there all of the time we were in California. The street car run through the center of the building.

From there we went by trolley to the foot hills of Mount Low, then got in a cable car and went up an incline of 45 degrees almost five thousand feet high. There are two cars; one went up while the other came down the motive power was heavy machinery, at the top of the incline. My feelings in regard to danger were not much aroused but as we passed the other car we realized that we were only half way up. To look back and see that long steep hill then look up barely able to see the top, listen to the squeaks and groans of the car and the complaints of fear by many of the passengers caused an enigma of my thinking qualms as to where the stopping place would be in case that two inch cable should break. There were about 50 in the car. It was an open top car and we were kept in by chains running along each side. Some of the ladies covered their faces as they could not see it break here and when at the top would give any thing if they were only at the bottom and would not go any further for fear they might come in contact with another such a ride. The fact that on another side of the track up the incline a larger per cent of the way was a most frightful down several thousand feet made it look much more dangerous than it would otherwise. From the top of the incline we took a small open trolley car and went round and round that peaked mountain often over very high trestles and around cliffs where the outside of the track was supported by props running down to the rock where we could see straight down several thousand feet and often very short curves. One man remarked to me that he believed the motorman was either drunk or crazy and did not realize the speed he was running around these short and high curves. I told him I guessed he had made the run around so many times that he had become accustomed to it. Well we continued ride I would judge about 12 or 14 miles up to the superannated Indian Alpine tavern. From there we could take our choice, ride up on a foot wide Indian trail on a burro or go a foot. Well all of the party excepting one lady preferred to go on foot. So we started, the burro in the lead and we followed in the rear Indian file. It took two men to keep the burro in motion. I don't think he enjoyed his company very well, there being only one of his kind. If ever we kept him going until we had gone about that mountain 12 or 14 times. I believe they claim it to be about 7 miles. Some places we passed around cliffs where it was a huge rock mass and only a very narrow path footing we could look nearly straight down several thousand feet to the tops of trees in the canyons and also see the paths we had come over. One man got a large rock loose and started it bounding down the rock over the path. I called him down and asked him if he didn't realize that there might be people down there and he said he never thought of that. Well after stopping to rest and view the scenery several times we finally arrived at the top where a high pole is erected and "Old Glory" is waving. The top is round and about 60 or 70 feet across. I intended to take pictures of the surrounding country but the clouds were between us and the country and were so dense and thick that we could not see through them. We noticed they were heavy when we passed through them. The only pictures I could get was of the tops of other mountains at a distance. After staying up there sometime and getting some rest we started down by the steep trail. While it was some shorter it was much more tiresome than going up. When we arrived at tavern some of the party were about exhausted but the relief came when we traveled by trolley, but accompanied by more fear as they drove along faster going down than they did going up. But we arrived safely at the foot hills then took the trolley coach for Los Angeles, declaring that we had taken one of the finest trips of the Pacific coast.

My next letter will be concerning points of interest at Portland, a steam-er ride around Cape Horn and up through the Cascade rocks.

DON'T LET THEM FOOL YOU.

How A Grocery Agent Worked Dade County People.

The following from the Greenfield Vedette tells how a grocery agent has been working the people of Dade county:

The old "grocery order" fake has been successfully worked in Dade county during the past two weeks—for the first time in about 10 years. Orders were taken for some days by a smooth individual who delivered the goods Saturday and afterwards made no secret of his smoothness. In fact he boasted of it long and loud. "My long suit is peppers and spices," he confessed in one of his talkative spells. "I give 'em the sugar but they catch it—when it comes to peppers and spices. Why, I sold one damphead enough of that sort of stuff to last the whole county for 10 years." Of course when the buyers came for their goods Saturday they found ten per cent added, "for freight," explained the affable salesman, and of course the additional ten per cent was paid, though in many instances under protest and threats of suit on the signed order.

One inquisitive buyer, whose order amounted to $15 took his copy of the order to a local grocery house for the purpose of ascertaining just how much he had saved. The bill was duplicated for $12, a saving of $3 and 1/2 per cent. It is safe to say that this is no exceptional case.

Some day the people will learn not to bite at fakes of this kind, but that day appears a long time coming, although it may be said that this fake can be worked here only about once in ten years.

INCREASED ATTENDANCE

The Compulsory School Law Brings Children to School.

County Superintendent of Schools Luther Hardaway was very busy yesterday, his office being full of teachers and other visitors who had business concerning the schools.

Mr. Hardaway yesterday stated to a Democrat representative that there was a great increase in the attendance over that of last year, the reason for this being the new compulsory school law. Although no drastic measures have been taken to enforce this law the simple announcement that there is such a law has brought a great many children to school who would otherwise have stayed at home.—Carthage Democrat.
